WEEKLY WASHINGTON UPDATE

Like many other Members of Congress, the month of August is a time to get our boots on the ground and to hear what folks are thinking back at home. This week, I met with dozens of constituents in the district offices and at events. I've also had the opportunity to get an update on the status of the James River Ghost Fleet and to speak with members of the healthcare coverage underwriter's community. I'm also looking forward to inviting folks out to my own townhalls on healthcare reform at the end of the month.

First, this past Monday I joined with Kevin Tokarski, associate administrator for national security with the U.S. Maritime Administration as well as other state and local officials to discuss the disposal of reserve ships in the James River moored near Fort Eustis. There is a clear and present concern that these ships, which still contain fuel, could begin leaking in the event of a natural disaster.

Currently, there are 27 ships moored on the James River, and we have been successful in reducing the risk to the Bay by offloading 85% of the fuel since 2001. Luckily, we've also been able to scrap at least nine ships a year since 2001, and I am working to make sure we continue to fund the Ship Disposal Program in order to maintain this progress.

Next, on Wednesday I joined with Democratic Rep. Glen Nye, whose district abuts mine, to speak with healthcare coverage underwriters on the pending healthcare legislation before Congress. While I was glad to continue a bipartisan effort towards discussing reform efforts, I was most struck by the civility and thoughtfulness displayed by participants. Given so many news reports displaying heated concerns over reform, this was a refreshing event. Neither party has a monopoly on ideas, and I'm committed to ensuring all ideas are heard in a balanced manner.
